These can then irritate and inflame the internal lining of the small intestine and allow absorption of foods into the blood before they’re fully digested.